INTERVIEWER You have read much during your life? The finest flowers of civilization. We are not their masters. Around 1918 he visited her house and was so taken with the simplicity of the décor that he was inspired to write the poems published as De Outremer à indigo From ultramarine to indigo.

The hazy world of Blaise Cendrars

One has other things to do in life aside from writing books. They belong to this state of activity which we call life. You can follow any responses to this entry through the feed.

Blaise Cendrars Quotes (Author of Moravagine)

Yet he was one of the few poets who gave a distinctive emphasis to the handling of the poetical subject, rather than the subject itself. At the age of fifteen, Cendrars left home to travel in Russia, Persia, China—and everywhere in between—while in the employ of a jewel merchant; he wrote about this apprenticeship several years later in his long poem, Transiberien.
