Attractions in Ayrshire

Or why not tee off at almost 50 courses and 3 Championship Courses, like Royal Troon, or try a more unique course like Shiskine Golf Course on the Isle of Arran which has 12 holes and spectacular views? Nevertheless, most tourists opt to visit a number of small towns and attractions by car. Closer to Ayr are the attractive ruins of the 16th-century Greenan Castle.

Whether you want an exciting day at the races or a to Ailsa Craig to see the wildlife and sea birds, you will not be disappointed with this part of Scotland. The park's animal collection mostly comprises cute and cuddly varieties, including guinea pigs and rabbits, although a few larger species can be seen, including camels and llamas, as well as monkeys.

Tourism

The area offers an attractive combination of history and heritage, cultural venues and visitor attractions. The Robert Burns Museum opened in 2010 and now encompasses six distinct sites all of which any visitor should make sure to see. Royal Troon is available for visitors to play between May and October and will cost around £200.

Welcome Back!

When it comes to wining and dining, South Ayrshire boasts a wide array of restaurants, bistros and bars, many serving local produce to suit all tastes and pockets.

In those days these farmer's cottages would be divided between the side where the people lived and the side where the animals lived, called the byre. Prestwick Golf Club, host of the first British Open and consequently the first major golf tournament , can also be accessed by the general public, though the course is not quite of the same standard.

Attractions in Ayrshire

Take a stroll on Ayr beach, explore rockpools at Croy Shore, or why not try kitesurfing in Troon? A pleasant riverside walk along the Garnock is also available for visitors to enjoy.

This Cistercian monastery was founded in 1273 by Devorgilla, who also played a part in the creation of Balliol College, Oxford. Visitors from the United States like to visit the apartments used by President Eisenhower, who was granted the right to stay in Culzean Castle whenever he wished for a unique overnight stay, guests can rent out his rooms. South Ayrshire offers a wide selection of quality assured accommodation from hotels to bed and breakfast and self catering establishments to suit all preferences and budgets that are available all year round.
