It is very worthy tribute to a remarkably independent New Testament scholar and greatly valued teacher and churchman. In 1980 he won the Collins Religious Book Award for his work The Language and Imagery of the Bible. It is clear to me that he does think the NT strictly identifies the one God with the Father, and with the one god Yahweh of the OT.

The Glory of Christ in the New Testament

Dale Tuggy and guests bring some interesting points, and I really enjoy the humble, intelligent dialogue from both viewpoints.

Trembling in the Dark: Derrida's Mysterium Tremendum and the Gospel of Mark

Because he was non-Church of England, and because Mansfield was still a Permanent Private Hall and had not yet achieved status as a constituent College of the University see Colleges of the University of Oxford during this period 1969—1977, Caird was barred from holding an official university lectureship. In the tradition of George Caird's influential biblical studies, each contributor raises new questions whose answers will both advance current discussion and provoke future debate.
