Take the Reading Pledge

When teaching the simple sound-symbol correspondences, teachers should make sure the kids can hear those sounds and distinguish them from other sounds; they should make sure kids can recognize these letters within words; they should make sure the kids can sound out unknown words or even nonsense words using those correspondences; and they should be able to read and write words with those elements, too. I also keep one current book face up on my desk at work, so that if I have some free time, my environment is cuing me to read instead of me having to remember to do so.
