Pollen and nectar providers otherwise known as flowers! Beth was an early advocate of sustainable and ecological planting, right plant in the right place, and the garden reflects that. The ancient gravestones, each of interest and worth a read — if only we had had the time! Friday morning 28 May After checking out, we reassembled on the final morning at the renowned Beth Chatto Gardens, just a couple of miles down the road.

The wind had gained a touch of the northerly: it started cold, and remained at best cool, all day, especially on the windswept clifftop and beaches of the Naze. Ex-library books are definitely not stolen! There may also be other damage such as water damage however the text must not be obscured. Moths too are appearing, from tiny Green Longhorns and Nettle Taps to the relatively huge Lime Hawk-moth which had just emerged from its pupa, pumping up its wings in the Reservoir Garden: As the pond water has gradually warmed up, aquatic insects are appearing, including Large Red and Azure Damselflies... . along with Alderflies and their non-aquatic relatives Scorpion-flies.

A few Red Admirals and Orange-tips introduced flashes of colour to a dull day, but otherwise insect life was almost restricted to a few ant-like Miris striatus nymphs. Green Woodpeckers mingled with the multitude of Jackdaws, and family party of Long-tailed Tits huddled together brought the significance of the cold weather into sharp focus.
