to African Women's Theology

In this regard, it appears that the spiritually founded liberation theology of the Church and the biopsychosocial-spiritual model may complement one another well. Oduyoye is careful to point out that her reflections cannot be extrapolated as universally valid for all African women; rather, her views represent only the theology derived from The Circle of Concerned African Women Theologians. Baptist History and Heritage, 16 3, 19—28, 40.
