

Sir Gawain and the loathly damsel

Puffin Books - Bulfinch's Mythology: The Age of Chivalry by Thomas Bulfinch: Chapter 5

IMAGERY

- Visual imagery: pictures we see in our minds created by description. Images includes the similes and metaphors describing the LL in her ugliness and beauty: "She had long golden hair hanging to her waist, her figure was slender as a fairy's, her pale skin as perfect as a piece of polished ivory" (p. 180 bottom).
- Auditory imagery: silence = the absence of sound (builds suspense) "no bird song, no rustle of movement on the forest floor, not even the chink and creak of harness" (p. 178 bottom).

The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnelle

Her back was hunched, and her legs were twisted like two willow wands. Pale from sorrow, she began her mourning anew; concentrating on his soul, she opened a gold psalter and started to read the psalms and paid no attention to any man. His name is Horus, the hawk-headed deity, and he will play a crucial role in the second death and resurrection of his father Osiris.
