Professor Stern argues that nineteenth-century German prose is characterized by a particular combination of the prophetic and the archaic, of the existential and the parochial, and is only partially and sometimes not at all related to the social and political realities of the age. Having endured a spell as an apprentice pharmacist, he gave this up in 1843 as too tedious. This applies equally to the theme of sexuality, in keeping with late sensibilities.

He took an active interest in the political upheavals leading to the March 1848 Revolution in the German-speaking territories, the aim of which was to achieve a measure of democracy. Consequently, Professor Stern suggests alternative criteria to the common notion of realism with which to assess their work.

It is left to the reader to reach conclusions as to the balance between these two conflicting views. Fontane also excels in detailed descriptions of houses, furnishings and rooms, the realistic backdrop to the lives he analyses.

J. P. Stern

It was only relatively late in life that Fontane turned to the writing of novels, the first one being Vor dem Sturm; Before the Storm 1878 set in the time of the Napoleonic Wars.
