Perspectives in Modern Psychology

The presence of severe psychopathology was observed in 60% of the fathers: major depression 52%, schizophrenia and other psychoses 10%, and acute substance intoxication 5%. Among those under the age of 5 years, 61% were killed by their own parents, half by their mothers 30%, and half by their fathers 31%. The findings of the above cited Finnish study Putkonen et al, 2009 suggest that prevention of filicide is not the task of psychiatry alone; health care and society must work together.

Reflections on filicide

International Journal of Law and Psychiatry 30, 191-200. Gender imbalance in infant mortality: a cross-national study of social structure and female infanticide.

Experiential Psychopathology

The shadow of the object. Most of the cases reported were preceded by denial of pregnancy and 56% of of the sample had a history of sexual abuse. This lack of knowledge makes prevention difficult.

Perspectives in Modern Psychology

In the postmodern era, those students are supported much more with better treatment than modern era, which I see as one great positive part of postmodern education in terms of humanism. For these women, there is a specific need for social and psychiatric support during pregnancy and the first year of life. Filicidal parents who are not defined as mentally ill Neonaticide is caused mostly by this group of mothers, usually very young mothers who cannot cope with social stress factors Haapasalo et al, 1999; Stanton et al, 2000; Bourget et al, 2007.
