As Japanese Kanji, this is so rare, that most Japanese people are not aware of its existence. The dismantling of the traditions of ko-chih-hsueh and po-wu-hsueh that had linked natural studies, natural history, and medicine to classical learning from 1370 to 1905 climaxed during the cultural and intellectual changes of the New Culture Movement. The journal K'o-hsueh Science, which was published by the newly founded Science Society of China Chung-kuo k'o-hsueh-she and first issued in 1915, assumed that an educational system based on k'o-hsueh was the panacea for all of China's ills because its knowledge system was superior.
