The police bring Erica to identify one of the suspects in her attack; though she recognizes the assailant, she does not identify him. Here's what I loved most about this book: it feels natural. Mercer persuades Erica to lower her gun, but after looking into her pleading eyes, hands her his own gun to use instead.

And you are never alone.

The history and adventures of Godfrey Ranger

Jensen was a great character and I loved his daydreams, his hopes, and how hard he tried to work to get better at things.

It felt like Chmakova was trying to push her own agenda rather than tell a good story like she did in Awkward. It was a realistic depiction of middle school kids, albeit one that assumes most human being are basically good.

Stubborn Cinderella

I hope Chmakova is not done writing about Berrybrook Middle School. She tracks down one of her attackers ex-girlfriends, who has the video recording of the attack but is too frightened to reveal anything further.
