London Bridge

When Laud was Bishop of London, he narrowly escaped drowning in crossing from Putney to his palace, one dark night, by the capsizing of the ferry-barge with his horses and suite. We must now retrace our steps down Putney Hill, and through the village to the river-side.

Besides these I may mention the linnet, blackcap, willow-warbler, and wryneck, of which I cannot be quite positive, and last, not least, the Guards' raven, constant while his battalion is in town, on the trees near Buckingham Gate.

Dictionary of National Biography, 1901 supplement/Memoir of George Smith

The Ladies of Honour and the Officers belonging to the Empress advance to that Princess in like manner, to know her Pleasure, 53 and then every body retires, unless there is Music, which happens very often: The Dinner does not last much above an Hour: Their Majesties stay at Table till every thing is taken away, even so much as the Cloth, but then a fresh one is laid on, upon which the Treasurer places a Bason and an Ewer of Silver gilt, and presents them to their Majesties to wash.
