Neither do ordinary impressions of travel—impressions of the beauties of the tropics and the captivating strangeness of the island people and their ways—fill much space in them.

Vailima Letters: Being Correspondence addressed by Robert Louis Stevenson to Sidney Colvin, November 1890

I got such a good start in your letter, that I kept on at it, and I have neither time nor energy for more.

Vailima letters : being correspondence addressed by Robert Louis Stevenson to Sidney Colvin, November 1890

Hence I should guess it was three-quarters of a mile. So many towered above, one over the other, and the missile, whatever it was, dropped in the stream and was gone before I had recovered my wits.

Whether to go, what to attack. I am getting spoiled with all this good society.

Vailima Letters: Being Correspondence Addressed by Robert Louis Stevenson to Sidney Colvin, November, 1890

On the Friday, I was all forenoon in the Mission House, lunched at the German Consulate, went on board the Sperber German war ship in the afternoon, called on my lawyer on my way out to American Consulate, and talked till dinner time with Adams, whom I am supplying with introductions and information for Tahiti and the Marquesas.
