The following are the present officers of the company: Governor, The Right Worshipful Sir Matthew White Ridley, Bart. MERCANTILE societies, anciently called Guilds or fraternities, are thought to have been founded in Europe near the latter end of the 11th century. A copy of their oath, on admission, dated 1517, is preserved in the books of the Merchant Adventurers.

The following are the names of the original officers of the company, inserted in the charter, viz Joseph Atkinson left by will, in 1712, 100, to be lent to a young trading member for five years without interest. The oldest ordinary of this society, the original of which, having affixed to it many seals and skin-marks, with the names of the brethren, is dated June 1, 1512, and is still preserved in their archives.

Indeed, the security and prosperity of trade and commerce, during those turbulent times, were mainly owing to the successive formation of trading companies, and fraternities of mechanics. The exports of this society, about the year 1520, appear to have been canvas, sheep skins, lamb-fels, lead, grindstones, coals, and rough-tanned leather.

Their ancient hall or court, above the Maison Dieu on the Sandhill, was pulled down in 1823, and has been rebuilt in an elegant and substantial style. In the year 1480, the society of Merchants of Newcastle subscribed a written agreement for the better government of that body, which was to remain in force for six years.
