The Stoneholding (Legacy of the Stone Harp Book 1) by Mark Sebanc

Darkness looms over the ancient world of Ahn Norvys, and the Great Harmony of Ardiel lies rent asunder. King Grey once benefited from unrivaled strength, wealth, and prestige in a world governed by martial ability but now finds himself reborn in a society dominated by magic. Prince Starigan, heir to the throne, has been abducted and power has been usurped by a traitorous cabal. In the mountainous highlands of Arvon is the small but ancient community the Stoneholding, which has held out against the gathering forces of the evil Ferabek.

The Sacred Fire is quenched by the enemy, and without it, the Harmony of Ardiel cannot survive.

The English used when characters interact in, for example, the older languages of the envisioned world, is often excessive in nature.

Kal, green in years and understanding, was torn from his pastoral life in a remote highland clanholding, and thrust out onto a broader stage in a journey of danger and escape, discovery and enlightenment. As a member of the Order of Inquisition, Vokkan has no official say in the creation of Law, but he has powerful allies willing to do his bidding. The point that others have made regarding the detailed nature of the story is valid, but contrary to the general consensus, I do not see this as an inherently bad thing.

I even enjoyed the flowery language, because sometimes I do actually read books for their prose.
