Management of Laboratory Animals

Vermin Control: Professionally directed programs to prevent, identify, and eradicate or control insects or escaped, feral, or wild rodents must be instituted, regularly scheduled, and consistently documented. Inadequate water quality or fluctuations of water temperature are physiologic stressors that impact the intake, digestion, and use of food; alter the immune system; and predispose to opportunistic infection. Bull, Michigan State University, East Lansing, Michigan Leland E.

Laboratory Animal Management: Dogs

Within research facilities, environmental conditions must be carefully controlled so that, along with conscientiously applied programs of animal care and use, the best possible conditions for conducting research are provided.

Aquatic Manual: OIE

As a result of a rule published by APHIS to streamline the approval process for fruit and vegetable imports, requirements for the importation of fruits and vegetables that were previously located in the Code of Federal Regulations CFR have been moved to the FAVIR Database effective October 15, 2018.
