Christo and the Miami Surrounded Islands

It would be Christo and Jeanne-Claude's only permanent piece of work. He declared an intent to end the settlement talks and let Judge King choose a winner and a loser.

CHRISTO

Nobody had ever noticed before that the bay, with its swarms of speeding power boats, was ecologically fragile, nor the islands themselves—chunks of earth, now litter strewn, that had been dumped into the bay by the Army Corps of Engineers when it deepened the Intracoastal Waterway early in the century. It was constructed in 1578 and was believed to be designed by French architect Baptiste Androuet du Cerceau.

That would certainly trigger the kind of environmental alarms on behalf of sea grasses and manatees that could, by legal agreement, lead to the aborting of the project. Christo then made an offer forming the basis for an agreement finally signed at 6:45 p. Because every element had to be manipulated from the water from 32 boats, including the rubber rafts, Surrounded Islands was logistically one of the most complicated projects Christo has undertaken.
