Beyond Marxism : the faith and works of Hendrik de Man : Dodge, Peter, 1926

Born 17 November 1885 in Antwerp, he received his first impressions from the stable, well-ordered world that his prosperous and cultured Flemish family enjoyed in the placid confidence of the era of the Pax Britannica and in the bland optimism of those carried to ever increasing well-being by the commercial and industrial affluence of Belgium. Both Dorothy Deflandre, Executive Officer of the U. Like many others who had put their trust in that hollow movement and the equally hollow Second International, he was shattered in 1914 when those organisations collapsed and the erstwhile international comrades sided with their respective governments.

It was this background of stability, candor, and trust that formed the baseline by which the children in the de Man family were to judge the world. In: Beyond Marxism: The Faith and Works of Hendrik de Man. What he thought was needed was planned capitalism based on a mixture of private enterprise and nationalisation, and government control of credit to secure full employment.
