Immanuel Kant and Karl Marx Example

His daily schedule then looked something like this. In his Methods of History Hegel writes the following of the original historians, that They translate: what is externally present into the realm of mental representation, thereby bringing the outer into the inner—just as the poet works up the stuff of his own sensation into images for our minds. The first thing to look at as how these thinkers narrate history, which terms they put a trajectory of history into and how that affects the way they argue their points, Immanuel Kant starts out with a postulation in his Idea for a Universal history from A Cosmopolitan View that like every other natural event are determined by universal laws.

Kant as a problem for Marxism

One must not in any way blame this method on his accidental individuality; it is rather the method of his principle, it is the frank, naive, reckless method of the historical school. For Kant, man is essentially right, and this is the attribute that unlike animals, releasing the instinct and necessity. The Kantians, on the contrary, are as it were the appointed priests of ignorance, their daily business is to tell their beads over their own powerlessness and the power of things.
