This line of investigation has focused upon the figure that grounds the epistemology and value system of modernity, as it has been articulated in Western Europe, sometimes producing consideration of its trajectory with respect to non-European geographical cultural spaces within the dynamics of imperialism. He also worked as a reader and book reviewer for prestigious journals such as Latin American Research Review, Colonial Latin American Historical Review, Revista de Crítica Literaria Latinoamericana and Revista Iberoamericana. My analysis of this process is predicated on a conceptualization.

Indeed, while in Italy, this group of intellectuals produced some of the fundamental works that would shape the historical and political discourse of the post-independence nineteenth-century Latin American nations; texts that, once again with a few exceptions, are begging for critical editions and new readings. He authored articles on Mexican and Peruvian colonial literature, focusing on questions of ethnicity and race, satirical writing, and intersections between literature and paradigms of knowledge during the Baroque period and the eighteenth century in colonial Spanish America. In this fashion, I have sought to discern the outline of an ideological program for criollo political and cultural hegemony in the eighteenth century.
