Our aim therefore is not merely to make the children understand, and still less to force them to memorize, but so to touch their imagination as to enthuse them to their inmost core. Control of the hand in preparation for writing is developed through the practical life curriculum and other specially designed exercises.

Precision: The drive toward precision and perfection inclines each child to imagine solutions, try them out, and if successful, use them to solve real-life challenges in the prepared environment.

Montessori Method

The prepared environment presents children with the possibility of freedom and opportunities to develop self-discipline. This builds self-confidence, analytical thinking, and the satisfaction that comes from accomplishment. Second Period activities include hands-on materials, reading and writing assignments, and independent research opportunities.
