Twenty-First-Century Faculty In this era of rapidly changing student demography and a fluctuating economy, the professoriate of the twenty-first century will continue to face interesting challenges and opportunities—an aging faculty, new colleagues and students with superior technical skills, and the potential for developing new and more effective teaching strategies. Overall, 44% of undergraduates were enrolled at community colleges, according to an AACC analysis of IPEDS data that of two-year public colleges to include about 100 community colleges that award small numbers of bachelor's degrees. Twenty-two percent were still enrolled.

National Survey of Recent College Graduates

Dual-credit students are enrolled in college courses for which they earn both college credit and credit toward their high school graduation. The survey sampled individuals living in the United States who received their degree in the prior 2 or 3 academic years and were under age 76. Training seminars and workshops can be customized for particular companies.
