Anne Stevenson: Selected Poems

That taken into account, there is still the problem to contend with that much of Akhmatova's work is, for obvious reasons, overtly political, and makes no attempt to convey its message artistically; worse yet, a good deal of that work is imagist, impressionist. I will continue to do so for years to come.

Edith Wharton: Selected Poems

That wasn't that surprising but it was a little surprising. He's more like a longtime friend who's not always steady on his feet, occasionally overreaching, a bit heartbroken, a bit bitter, a bit sweet, a whole lot of queen LOL. In Praise of Limestone 75.

Anne Stevenson: Selected Poems

In times when almost everyone wrote like they wrote 200 years ago he showed us that there is another way to put the lines, another way to go at the subject; you can just cut it in half and to hell with it. Her works include We Are Shining, Bronzeville Boys and Girls, A Street in Bronzeville, In the Mecca, The Bean Eaters, and Maud Martha. The Science-Fantasy Publishers: A Bibliographic History, 1923-1998.

You wave an eternal banner but for a faction of devotees and the stateless.

Edna St. Vincent Millay: Selected Poems

Edith Wharton: Selected Poems

Why on earth I have left Anna Akhmatova unread until now? Why not burst in like a poisoned shell, Or steal in like a bandit with his kunckleduster, Or like a typhus-germ? I have a much older edition of Auden's Selected Poems, when his Funeral Blues poem was still part of Two Songs for Hedli Anderson. The poem describes the Siege of Leningrad.

Amy Lowell: Selected Poems

Only bedroom-candles burnt When I looked into the dark house, And they were yellow and indifferent. The way he used language and syntax, shaping it to his own meaning and expression is beautiful.
