Positivism	Interpretivism
Relationship between society and the individual
Society shapes the individual - "Society consists of 'social facts' which exercise coercive control over individuals" (Durkheim)	Individuals have consciousness and are not just puppets who react to external social forces as positivists believe
People's actions can generally be explained by the social norms they have been exposed to through their socialization, and their social class, gender and ethnic background.	Individuals are intricate and complex and different people experience and understand the same "objective reality" in different ways and have individual reasons for their actions.
General focus of social research
The point of research is to uncover the laws that govern human behaviour; just as scientists have discovered the laws that govern the physical world.	The point of research is to gain in-depth insight into the lives of respondents, to gain an empathetic understanding of why they act in the way that they do.
Sociologists should use similar methods and approaches to the natural sciences.	Sociologists need to use non-scientific methods to see the world through the eyes of the actors doing the acting.
Prefer quantitative methods which allow for the researcher to remain detached from the respondents.	Prefer qualitative methods which allow for close interaction with respondents.
Preferred research methods
Quantitative Official Statistics Social Surveys Questionnaires Structured Interviews	Qualitative Personal Documents Participant Observation Unstructured Interviews
Require research to be valid, reliable and representativeness	Prepared to sacrifice reliability and representativeness for greater validity
