In Another Place, Not Here by Dionne Brand

In No Language is Neutral, a similar image becomes a watershed moment in the persona's sexual awakening: she was a woman whose eyes came fresh, saying, I trust you, you will not be the woman who walks out into the Atlantic at Santa Maria and never returns 37. A woman can be a bridge from these bodies whipping cane. Brand's ability to craft the story with the perfect words allowed me to enter more deeply into the story.

I like the contrast between the sparseness of the book's structure and plot, and the lushness of the words a great deal. She had deserted herself she knew, given up a continent of voices she knew then for fragmented ones. People love to talk about where they live, what their daily routine looks like, and what the socio-cultural realities are in their home country.
