Rockingham died the next day. While much older, wood engravings enjoyed an important renaissance in the late eighteenth century through Thomas Bewick and continued in popularity through the nineteenth century.

Regency History: Charles James Fox, Whig MP (1749)

Under the impact of the French Revolution his politics lost their emotional colouring, and he became the advocate of a political ideal, far different from that of his friend Burke. Fox himself, while lamenting the atrocities, attempted to explain the excessive brutality as an understandable reaction to monarchical despotism. He was mentored by Edmund Burke and spoke out against the American war.
