Black Metropolis: A Study of Negro Life in a Northern City by St. Clair Drake and Horace R. Cayton

His scholarly work, written from both historical and sociological perspectives, has concentrated on the condition of African Americans living in inner cities, especially the underclass. This broad purpose explains the dual authorship, for the task seemed to require the tools of both the historian and the geographer—the former with his emphasis on the texture of life and the latter with his concern for spatial relationships.
