Platt National Park

The CCC was organized by the federal government during the The Great Depression to provide useful employment for thousands of citizens and to develop and save the Nations natural resources. After the establishment of the National Park, the old town of Sulphur Springs was abandoned, and when the present boundaries of the park had been established the present town of Sulphur, now county seat of Murray County, grew up. The visitor center located in reserve educates travelers on the history of the land and the animals that graze through it.

Civilian Conservation Corps and Platt National Park Sulphur, Oklahoma 1933 - 1942 This historical monument is a gift honoring the young men of Civilian Conservation Corps Company 808 who contributed a major part to the building of this beautiful park.

Most People Have No Idea Oklahoma Has A Lost National Park...And It's Stunning

Fish and Wildlife Service maintains camping opportunities at two locations: Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge, located near Lawton, and Salt Plains National Wildlife Refuge, near Enid. Cultural Landscape Report for the Platt Historic District. For many generations the sulphur springs of the Chickasaw Nation had been known for their reputed healing qualities.

Oklahoma's lost national park

The intimate communion of prairie and rich forested valley, the sophistication of the bustling little city in contrast with the rough life of the outlying ranches, the mingling in common intercourse of such differing human elements as the Eastern tourist, the free and easy Western townsman, the cowboy and the Indian, give rare spice to a visit long enough to impart the spirit of a country of so many kinds of appeal. If the Advisory Board approves the committee recommendation, the Board will ask the Secretary of the Interior to formally approve the NHL designation. While we can not retroactively fault that decision because of scientific knowledge that was unavailable at that time, we now know that the recharge area for the springs in the original Platt NP is a rather large area extending for miles around the park.
