Connolly, wearing a bright safety vest and yellow rainproof overalls, carries a can of bear spray and a ringed notebook. He partnered with , a non-profit society created by Prince George scientists and forest ecologists to draw attention to the critical role of the inland rainforest in storing carbon and sheltering a myriad species in the age of extinction, as scientists worldwide warn of a global and potential ecological collapse. Troth was often depicted with the head of a sacred ibis.

Raindrops begin to plop onto the leaves of wild ginger, blackcurrant, bunchberry and foam flower, which looks like constellations of tiny white stars on the forest floor. Tiny flecks of coastal lichens no larger than a millimetre stuck to the feathers and feet of migrating songbirds, while stowaway seeds sunk roots into valley soils, watered by year-round rain and the constant trickling of snow. Nile monitor Nile monitors are the second largest reptile in the Nile next to the Nile crocodile, growing as long as 2.
