Legends Of Long Ago by Margaret E. Martignoni

How much he had to tell her about Phoenix, and Cilix, and dear Theseus and of the poor Queen's lonely grave in the wilderness! Guv me the water, ole 'ooman. The women were at work melting their pewter porringers into bullets. How lovely the garden was! She was a little tired with playing all day long, so she sat still on the green grass and very soon she closed her eyes.

If you stand erect, with your arms hanging by the sides, and then deliberately fold the arms, as in this figure, you will find the points of the shoulders are drawn forward two inches, and the chest much contracted. She did not even remember to put out her torch, and it looked very pale and small in the bright morning sunshine. They read quickly, and have captured the imaginations of millions.

Hero Tales by Mabel Williams

The eagle sweeps across the fiery line a second later and falls, maimed and burned to the ground; where a dozen fierce hands smite the life out of him, and the great giant Thjasse perishes among his foes. The world of Roshar is mesmerizing, terrifying, and alive! This King was fonder of gold than of anything else in the whole world: or if he did love anything better, it was the one little daughter who played so merrily beside her father's footstool. Then, indeed, she would stand and look at them with tears in her eyes.

But what makes this series is the characters. If you want to force a particular order, use the character to divide the number and the descriptor. But, luckily, there was no harm done, save badly frightening everybody, and breaking all the windows.

The Young Folks Treasury

He devours all the cattle for ten leagues about, and commits unheard-of devastation everywhere. She was so unhappy that she even forbade the flowers to bloom.

Young Folks' Treasury, First Edition

For, on the fine September morning when the sun poured out golden showers, and Leafland sat fair and smiling in robes of green, and so the whole universe was golden-green, there came a messenger flying from the North country,—a wandering Wood-thrush, deserted, dragged, and forlorn, faltering on weary wing through the lovely lanes of Leafland.

Legends Of Long Ago by Margaret E. Martignoni

Wait till you can see the white of their eyes! Our regiment was by a rail-fence on the northeast side of the hill. Epic action scenes pack the pages.
