Louisiana barrier

These conditions required sea level to be about 100 m 328 ft above its present position. On a beach this reduction occurs most commonly in the lee of obstacles, such as debris e. The main constraint was the proximity to the dangerous forces of the gulf.

Massive sediment bypassing on the lower shoreface offshore of a wide tidal inlet — Cat Island Pass, Louisiana

High winds and waves south of Grand Isle caused a jack-up barge to collapse. Historically, this has been followed by gradual emigration from coastal communities Smith et al.
