The Best Poems of the 1930s

Coincidentally, this coincides with MacNeice joining the BBC. Faber and Faber published Selected Poems in March 1940, which contained 20 poems drawn from Poems 1935, The Earth Compels and Autumn Journal.

Collected Poems: Louis MacNeice, ed Peter McDonald

Louis MacNeice was born in Belfast in 1907 and educated at Marlborough and Merton College, Oxford. I was surprised at MacNeice's seeming inability to extend his interests, even to explore — a kind of absence of curiosity. MacNeice, as represented here, becomes a great 20th century poet.

Louis MacNeice

Those pelmets appear on the first page of Autumn Journal 1939, MacNeice's finest long poem.

Collected Poems by Louis MacNeice

One of his last poems. In the book, MacNeice is set in amongst others of the new, presenting a version of modernism in which Eliot is the star.

Collected Poems by Louis MacNeice

Too many waltzes have ended. Unsuccessful attempts at playwriting and another novel were followed in September 1935 by Poems, the first of his collections for Faber and Faber, who would remain his publishers. MacNeice was drinking increasingly heavily, and having more or less serious affairs with other women.
