It is a unique and essential work of reference. And anyone with a serious interest in horology should have a copy. I do recollect a while back on this board that a maker not in the new edition was found in volume 1 or 2, can't remember which, so obviously Loomes was not 100% successful in compiling all the entries from both volumes, but hardly surprising giving the enormity of the task.

As I heard the story from a usually reliable source: The poor fellow was hit by a lawsuit and injunction by Abeler, and inspite of proving in court that Abeler himself had copied the majorities of names on his lists including the previously published errors of his list from other older books the creator of the new list was ordered by the court to take down his online list unless he wanted to risk million dollar fines. Dust Jacket Condition: Very Good.
