by Lucy Larcom

What is the meaning of these moods and states that fetter some of us so? I believe it is in me to do better things than I have done, and I shall work on in the faith of leaving something that will find its true place in the right time, because of the life there is in it. George and Sarah and I all had the doctor at once. If I have lived unworthily for a week, the Sabbath quietly shows me myself in her mirror.

Lucy Larcom: life, letters, and diary (1894 edition)

The sail down the Kennebec River was delightful, and I took a wicked sort of pleasure in shutting myself up from the crowd and enjoying it! Robinson, who will let me. My poems are about places on Cape Ann, in the wider world, and in interior places of mind and heart. Looking out on the clouds at sunset, the thought of God as constantly evolving beauty from His own being into all created forms, struck me forcibly, as the right idea of our lives; that, like Him, we should be full of all truth and love, and so grow into beauty ourselves, and impart loveliness to all we breathe upon, or touch.

Her sensitive nature quickly responded to the free surroundings of her childhood. Let us say we are struggling to put down slavery, and we shall be strong. The introduction reveals my literary and religious connections to Lucy Larcom, a nineteenth-century writer who is most famous for her book of prose, A New England Girlhood Outlined from Memory and her book of poetry, Wild Roses of Cape Ann.
