The Captain laughed yet more heartily; while Mrs.

Evelina.

You must not, Madam, expect too much from my pupil; she is quite a little rustic, and knows nothing of the world; and though her education has been the best I could bestow in this retired place, to which Dorchester, the nearest town, is seven miles distant, yet I shall not be surprised if you should discover in her a thousand deficiencies of which I have never dreamt.

Evelina: Or, the History of a Young Lady's Entrance into the World by Fanny Burney, Paperback

Mirvan met several of her friends. I am going this morning to see poor Madame Duval, and to inquire after her health, which I think must have suffered by her last night's misfortunes; though, indeed, she seems to be naturally strong and hearty.

Evelina, Or, the History of a Young Lady's Entrance into the World by Fanny Burney

Monsieur Du Bois, who had seated himself very quietly at the fire, approached them, and expostulated very warmly with the Captain; but he was neither understood nor regarded; and Madame Duval was not released till she quite sobbed with passion. He has entrusted her into the care of a couple of prominent women to introduce her to operas and plays in cities like London and Bath and the company of those in high society.
