The artist made the paper plate for the well-known fashion and advertising photographer Bert Stern, who had set up an uber-chic New York boutique called On First Store. He returns to it again and again as a musician returns to a favourite theme or set of chords, a poet to a particular metre, or as Rembrandt did to his own ageing physiognomy. He gained fame during the 1960s and early 1970s after creating a series of blurred paintings based on black-and-white photographs.

The title of this work references an essay called Letter on the Blind for the Use of Those who See by Diderot, a French philosopher known for his art criticism. Utilizing the formal properties of shape, color, and composition to explore non-literary narratives, he went on to create increasingly complicated work that seemed to follow a natural progression of dynamism, tactility, and scale.

The Story Behind Jasper Johns' American Flag & His Most Famous Print

See more info about the work. First, each flag was printed in a flat green, gray and orange to which more painterly marks of a darker green, gray and orange were then added.
