Commercial Thinning Research

At the end of 1935, 10% of these men found jobs in the logging camps and sawmills. Commercial thinning likely only provides marginal increases in the cumulative merchantable volume available from a stand over a rotation. The forest experiment station was developed in two units; first the Mesachie unit, on the south side of Cowichan Lake where the present Research Station is situated, and the North Arm unit which was established in 1939 across the lake, about five kilometres from the village of Lake Cowichan.
