The latter summer also led to an opportunity to apprentice in Odawara under Eitetsu Hayashi — regarded as one of the foremost pioneers in both group-centric and solo contemporary taiko performance. The fate of the people of the Amur—Okhotsk region came to depend, not just on ideas of civilisation and progress flowing accumulated and refined in Europe, but also on the confluence of those ideas with the shifting images of the world created by many non-state societies such as those of the Ainu, Nivkh, Ulta, and Oroch and by a multitude of states including China and Japan.
