Situational Judgement Test Question Preview

You manage a quality assurance (QA) team in a telecommunications company. Your boss, the head of the QA department, holds monthly meetings with all subordinate team managers such as yourself. The purpose of these meetings is to review the performance of each manager and to discuss any issues that may arise. Your boss is a dynamic and ambitious person who likes to speak about vision of the department, future goals and destinations, and when referring to the tasks of each manager his requests are somewhat strict. You feel frustrated as you are not receiving specific operational guidelines to execute your team's tasks.

What would you do in this situation? Rank TWO of the following option one as the BEST and one as the WORST.

Question

Response #1: Set up a personal meeting with your boss and tell him that his instructions are too vague and general for you to handle, and that you need help to be more specific about operational teamwork.

Response #2: Try to see it as an opportunity to work more independently within your team. Ask your boss what kind of specific feedback he needs of you and for the team that will be directed at achieving your boss's objectives.

Response #3: Find out from the other team managers whether they are experiencing similar problems. If so, ask them how they deal with them, and act accordingly.

Response #4: Wait until the end of the quarterly meeting, when the boss asks the team managers for feedback, and politely tell him how you feel about the meetings.
