And of course—flexibility and humor go a long way as well! At a minimum, these children have had the trauma of entering care and losing their primary caregivers. Research has emphasised that placement stability, as well as having a family member or carer who values education, is key to doing well at school. The average age of children in care is 8, and the majority of children featured on the AdoptUSKids photolistings are nine or older.

Studies of children in care, over time, suggest that their educational problems begin before they become looked after, but not nearly enough is done while they are in care to address them. American philosopher and psychologist, John Dewey, suggested , including how to invite kids into deeper conversations. So think about ways that you can work with the school to make these activities accessible for foster children.

Fostering School and education Key findings Foster children want the same things in life as nearly all children: success at school, a good job, a happy family and children. It is only possible after social workers and judges have determined that a child cannot safely return home. Adoption is a permanent, legal relationship between the child and the parent.

Further study and work experience For a small minority of fostered children, going to university was the next step after school. However, notwithstanding my success, while I was writing this book, I found that I still had areas that I needed to work on personally to more fully overcome the trauma of my childhood, and ensure that my family relationships were not forever marred by the scars of my past.
