The Cantos

Reading Pound, one feels the weight of civic responsibility.

Canto I

This is not something the academics are willing to do, and many of them in my opinion miss the whole point. At its conclusion, the poem returns to the world of light via Ra-Set and Ocellus. It's a gorgeous failure, and well worth exploring, much like life.

The natural world and the world of government are related to tekhnē or art. Pound writes of the decline of the sense of the spirit in painting from a high-point in to the fleshiness of and its recovery in the 20th century as evidenced in the works of and others.

The demons are suspicious, but they let him try his plan, warning him that if he tried to escape they would catch him. The moon is frequently associated in the poem with creativity, while the sun is more often found in relation to the sphere of political and social activity, although there is frequent overlap between the two. Keep that shit up, Ezra! Like the rest of the sinners in Hell, the Grafters also experience Dante's concept of Divine Retribution.

Bel Canto

It's necessary to read it in chunks: often a particularly opaque and kind of boring canto turns out to have a formal function in relation to the ones around it that gives it the status of a low-activity passage in a piece of music. A similar parallel between Coke and the author of the Book of the Eparch is highlighted in Canto CIX. A lot of the nuance of meter and structure and word choice, etc goes past me I'm sure, so take this review with grain of salt.

But that's what reading is, though: lots of words and a few great, memorable moments that I only give this five stars because Pound is dead. Together these capabilities make the BD FACSCanto system one of the most powerful and reliable cell analyzers for busy, best-in-class clinical laboratories. Essentially self-taught, Lipton continued his calligraphic studies independently and upon graduating in 1974 he freelanced as a calligrapher, sign painter, and graphic designer eventually establishing a studio in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Canto LXIV covers the and other resistance to British taxation of the American colonies. The major locus of these cantos is the city of Venice.
