Curriculum evaluation

Using practicing professionals in a variety of homeland security areas as subject matter experts, this study was designed to elucidate a set of core academic areas and student learning outcomes that could characterize the intellectual underpinnings of the discipline and the outcomes on which an undergraduate degree in homeland security could be based. This article accounts for the emergence of outcomes as the predominant statements of educational intent in Australian schools, and synthesises the findings of two studies which investigated the extent to which teachers are incorporating outcomes into their teaching planning and practice in New South Wales. This problem involves the ability of the client or principal in education often the parent to have their needs met by the agent in education, teachers are usually considered the agent.

outcomes based assessment advantages and disadvantages

The long route clearly separates the governed clients from those that govern policymakers , with the latter holding full oversight authority.
