History of Philosophy

They also set the stage for two other important philosophers: , who combined their ideas into the theory of the four classical elements earth, air, fire and water , which became the standard dogma for much of the next two thousand years; and , who developed the extremely influential idea of that all of reality is actually composed of tiny, indivisible and indestructible building blocks known as atoms, which form different combinations and shapes within the surrounding void. Are there social structures or systems that play a role in history? Philosophy: A Very Short Introduction.

New Philosophy Books

Both the bio-centric and the topical chapters give some indication of the sweep of Kenny's gaze, which ranges over topics as diverse as logic and aesthetics and seven others as well and figures as far apart as Peirce and Derrida. Johann Gottfried Herder offers a strikingly different view about human nature and human ideas and motivations.
