Frontiers

Factors influencing recovery are emotional support from friends, relations, social and community supports.

Childhood sexual abuse and revictimization in adolescence

It offers recommendations to guide services, programs, policy, and research on victim support and assistance, treatments and penalties for offenders, and law enforcement. There is preliminary evidence that membership in some ethnic groups or coming from a dysfunctional family places an individual at a greater risk.

Resources Specific to Victims of Sexual Abuse

Impacts endured for upward of 12 months following the cessation of direct intervention services.

Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse

However, it is uncertain whether improved targeting will significantly reduce child placement rates, because those families who are most likely to benefit may not be the same as those who are most at risk for child removal. Costs of in-home therapy were significantly lower than the costs of out-of-home foster care. A study of infants in residential treatment showed short-term improvements in height and weight and interaction skills, a decline in psychomotor development pre- to postintervention, and a decline in interaction skills 5 months later Elmer, 1986.

4 SOCIAL SERVICE INTERVENTIONS

Another finding yielded by this study is that abuse characteristics were associated with different outcomes for men and women.

Child abuse and adult offending

Peer-reviewed journals and grey literature from January 1, 2000 to December 31, 2018 were included. Criminal offending over the ages of 10-25 years is studied.
