A Comparative Grammar of British English Dialects, Volume 1: Agreement, Gender, Relative Clauses

Agard speaks on a radio broadcast, he does not use the patois of the poems. The important lesson in all this is that language researchers need to pay greater attention to local social, occupational and economic historical factors, together with modern developments, rather than arriving at broad generalisations about men's and women's non-standard speech. This resource may also be of general interest to language students on university degree courses, trainee teachers and anyone with a general interest in language science.

Each language in its spoken standard forms has its own range of speech sounds, while regional varieties may leave out some of these and add others. Suggestions for improvement are welcome.

Accents and dialects of Scotland

Film and TV drama Dramatists who write for film and TV or the stage may attempt to show the lexis and grammar of a dialect speaker, but their work is not authentic data in illustrating dialect in live use.

Even so, a number older speakers particularly in the remoter parts of the Dales, the North York Moors and the Yorkshire Wolds, do still preserve some of these Old Northern vowels. Similarly, although many Yorkshire accents sound similar, the Hull city accent is markedly different.
