Many of these areas include a street directory. Although primarily and rightly seen as an Irish directory and almanac, more than 600 of this edition's initial pages are given over to a multitude of separate directories pertaining to the United Kingdom and its dominions and the breadth of these multifarious directories are given on this editions title page, which reads as follows: Thom's Official Directory of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Year 1910. Michael Collins and the Troubles.

What was not known at the time, however, was the Indian meal contained little or no nutrients and only contributed further to the spread of disease. But for some reason they decided not to occupy and garrison the station; similarly the Citizens Army had been confusingly required to withdraw from Mallin. Thousands died in horrific conditions on the Famine Ships.

This helps set the stage for a short description of 'The Great Hunger' which began in Ireland around the Fall of 1845, continued up to 1851, and ended in the deaths of an estimated one million Irish or one out of every nine inhabitants.

Griffith's Valuation

The Census Commissioners in 1851 stated that, had the Famine not occurred, the population would have been 9,018,799. Realistically captains didn't obey this act and many people starved or died of disease in cramped quarters aboard the emigrant ships. After five or six days lying on a cold stone floor the prisoners were subjected to forcible feeding.
