The geopolitics of renewable energy: Debunking four emerging myths

Power shifts The rapid growth of renewable energy is likely to alter the power and influence of some states and regions relative to others, and to redraw the geopolitical map in the 21 st century. In Europe, natural-gas markets have developed since the 1960s on the basis of large pipelines built to connect Russia and other producers such as Norway and Algeria with the main European markets.

The Geopolitics Of Energy

Providing timely analysis of regional energy trends and the geopolitics of energy. Potential risks could be managed through shared oversight or by European countries taking responsibility for energy supplies at the Russian-Ukrainian border and supporting Ukraine in dealing with its domestic governance problems. China will continue to look for other sources, but it has actually stepped up its relationship with Russia.

The geopolitics of renewables; exploring the political implications of renewable energy systems

Petr Lang is a program director at the Prague Security Studies Institute. I think the technology surprises are partly surprises.

Geopolitics of Energy :: CERI

In an energy transition towards new energies, as the Chinese call it, they benefit in two ways. Like all governments, I think, the costs of the COVID crisis are going to hamper what else you can do. The transition will have an enormous global economic impact, but it will also bring about major changes in the map of global power.
