Utopia, Ltd.: Ideologies of Social Dreaming in England, 1870

It is committed to comparative research and articles that speak to cases beyond the traditional concerns of area and single-country studies. In the demonstration of the critique of technology in 20th century philosophical theories, this paper concentrates on the works of Oswald Spengler, Walter Benjamin, the Frankfurt School Horkheimer, Adorno and Marcuse and Martin Heidegger.

It is this purported proliferation which establishes the chronological boundaries of the present study considering works published between 1870 and 1900.

Mervyn Hartwig

In recognition of this interconnectedness, and the interdisciplinarity of utopian studies, some flexibility is built into the curriculum.

However, unlike the conservative Romantics, such as his friend John Ruskin, he does not advocate a return backwards, but rather a detour via the past on the way to the utopian future.
