Roman house

In addition to with its excavations, and archaeological museum, there is a nearby. The wealthy lived in single family homes called domus of various sizes depending on how rich they were.

Roman House

Food and libations were placed in front of their images and alongside were kept wax ancestor portraits.

A tour of a Roman Villa

You could possibly design your own home your self, however that's not a practical possibility for most people, as it requires lots of talent and time.

10 Roman Forts from Britannia

Archaeologists can usually tell the wealth of an owner of a Roman house by simply looking at the size of the lead pipes that brought water to that house. It's another site known for its well preserved mosaic floors and for the many artifacts discovered there. The tablets, wafer thin slices of wood which carry correspondence and messages written in ink, are the earliest known examples of handwriting ever found in the country.

Roman Sites and Roman Remains in Britain

For almost a century afterwards the kingdoms of Britain were kept quiet with gifts and diplomacy. Expect to get kitted up in miners gear to go underground for this one.

The Temple Mount and Fort Antonia

It was generally accessible directly from the vestibule and served as a complement to the rooms arranged around its perimeter. A ticket for both Vindolanda and the Roman Army Museum is very good value. The site, near Cheltenham in Gloucestershire, is enclosed by over a mile of Roman walls.

Roman Villas in England

The domus were often richly decorated, with bright, colourful frescoes.

Roman Villas in England

In December 2011 it was damaged by a fire in the roof space but has subsequently been repaired.
