And yet, modernism is not only essentially unproductive, it is superficial and based on spending. Another successful ploy adopted from 1918 onward included the periodic appending of supplements devoted solely to detailed coverage of topics such as leisure activities or the supervision of domestic help, ranging from ten to fifty pages in length. Common sense requires that in a democracy such as Japan the burden for the defence of the country ought to be shared evenly by all citizens—as the example of Okinawa shows, this is, however, not the case.
